Indian expert calls for BRICS unity against protectionism

The professor noted that BRICS countries need to work together to fight the new wave of protectionism. “The shared agenda is changing the relationship between the BRICS and the West,” he said. “This is a clear step by the West to enter into a new world of global growth. Yet the BRICS countries must stick together and India expects its friends like protectionism, especially the challenge of climate change,” said Singh, professor at the Beijing-based Center for International Disarmament at Auriga Group.
